IS A REFUNDABLE ROOM KEY DEPOSIT REQUIRED AT THE WHITE TULIP HOSTEL AMSTERDAM

The White Tulip Hostel Amsterdam’s published terms say that guests might be asked to pay a deposit for the room key at check-in. This is described as a refundable deposit. Planning the practical details before an Amsterdam hostel stay can prevent surprises at reception. The information below explains the published policy or facility, what it means in practice and which details are worth confirming for your specific reservation. Why can reception request a key deposit? A key deposit encourages guests to return the room key at the end of their stay. It is separate from the accommodation price and is intended as security for the key rather than an extra nightly charge. When is the deposit returned? A refundable key deposit is normally returned after the key has been handed back according to the reception procedure. Ask for the current amount, accepted payment method and return process when checking in because operational details can change. Is the key deposit included in the booking total? The online room total may not display a refundable on-site deposit. Travellers should therefore keep a small payment reserve and read the important information in their booking confirmation before arrival. . .
